1. Background

Our team is building a proof-of-concept multi-agent document workflow for the iContinuum project. On the evening in question, the three of us (Ajmain, Rifat, and I) met to work on it. When we arrived I walked to the vending machine to buy a granola bar. The machine took my $1.50 without dispensing anything for the second time this month. This is unrelated, but I remain upset about it.

2. Sequence of events

(a) At approximately 7:40 PM, Ajmain presented a proposed feature he called the "Party Agent": a fourth agent that would play an airhorn sound and display confetti after each audit. He also proposed renaming our agents after fictional characters.

(b) Rifat and I both told him it was not a good fit for a project we are presenting to a government-contractor audience. I may have described the idea as "a war crime against UX." I said it calmly.

(c) Ajmain then typed a command to push the change directly to main and said "watch this." I reminded him that main is a protected branch and that I am the only one who can merge to it, so the push would have failed anyway.

(d) At that point Rifat jumped Ajmain. I did not. I stayed next to the vending machine for the entire incident.

(e) Ajmain ended up on the floor next to the beanbag chair. Rifat pulled the laptop charger out of the wall. I did not see anyone throw anything. A granola bar (mine) ended up on the floor at some point during the commotion.

(f) The other student in the lounge called campus police. An officer arrived approximately ten minutes later.

3. Duration and injuries

The entire incident lasted about three minutes. I did not see anyone get hurt. When the officer arrived, Ajmain appeared fine.

4. Resolution

The three of us held a vote in our group chat. The Party Agent was rejected 2 to 1.

5. Additional comments

Ajmain was yelling during the incident. I was not. I also have a calculus exam on Thursday and would appreciate this being resolved quickly. For the record, Ajmain's black laptop was not damaged.
